To Whom It May Concern:

The Agricultural University of Krakow is a co-organizer, together with the Jagiellonian University and the Targi w Krakowie for the cyclic Eurobiotech Conferences held in Kraków. Most recently it was the Eurobiotech Congress entitled “Biotechnology in Agriculture” which took place at the Convention Center of Targi w Krakowie from 25 till 27 April 2007. The Congress was a significant international success with 450 attendees representing science and biotechnological businesses. The level of scientific part of the Congress was very high due to the invited key-speakers and rigour selection of oral and poster presentations. Most of the presentations were published in the impacted international journal (Acta Biochemica Polonica).

The Conference was excellently organized by the staff of the Targi w Krakowie. The scientific, exhibition and excursion programs were arranged perfectly so that the attendees had not only a chance to visit the old city of Kraków but also to get acquainted with the Polish cuisine. The staff of the Targi w Krakowie, with a very good command of the English language were very helpful, creating such friendly atmosphere the everybody was ready to make friends with other attendees. It contributed to the lively discussion held not only after each session but also during the perfectly organized Gala Dinner.

With so many participants representing different cultures, time zones and having different expectations it was not an easy task to put everything together. However, the Targi w Krakowie managed to it superbly.

We highly recommend the Targi w Krakowie to anyone aiming at organizing an international conference, congress or any scientific exhibition.
